I had gone back to Bangalore for my semester break this July. And the first thing that caught my eye at home was the 1000-piece puzzle in my sister's room. The complete encounter had taught me quite a few lessons, the first being I'm getting kinda old and speeding up my aging process, my back and neck hurts at the tender age of 19. A reminder that self-care and maintenance of our bodies is of utmost importance and comes first in priority.

2. Often, we tend to look for solutions in all the areas far and wide, much like hunting for puzzle pieces scattered on a table, sometimes at places where our hands can't reach. But the solution turns out to be right under our nose, right in front of our eyes and at the simple stretch of our hands.

3. Just as puzzle pieces may appear fitful and unnatural when isolated, people, ideas, and elements of life may seem incongruous on their own. However, when they come together, they are beautiful and perfect. Just like that, people wholly different and of diverging ethnics are surprisingly compatible in various sort of relations.

Let time decide when you'll belong, for where and with whom you'll belong has already been decided in the grander context of the cosmos, the final picture of the puzzle.

4. If one piece doesn't fit in a place, you simply reject that, forcing it will yield no triumph. There is merit in patience, allowing the right piece to fit in with consonance. No point holding on to a piece or decision that wasn't just made for it, hundreds of other pieces, hundreds of other choices.

5. Everything comes together slowly, piece by piece: Just as assembling a puzzle involves longanimity, connecting one piece at a time, life unfolds just the same. Major accomplishments and the cognizance of goals occur in pieces, with each small piece contributing to the fancier picture of your life, much like the pieces of a completed jigsaw puzzle that form a stunning image when brought to fruition. Recognizing and celebrating these small victories is key to moving forward.

6. Much like a puzzle, the bigger picture of our life has been planned, with each piece serving moments that we cherish or abhor. This revelation underscores the idea that there is a greater design to our existence, and even seemingly unrelated events play a role in the overarching scheme of things.

7. For puzzles and life, where I see no difference, choose your partner or collaborator smartly. Choosing the right companions and allies is crucial for achieving personal and collective success. It's a reminder to surround yourself with those who complement your strengths and support your goals. It is important to enjoy putting together each piece of the puzzle; putting together the memories that life has got to offer. Savor the process, savor life.
